THE Book of Psalms may be regarded as an epitome of Christian experience, and as comprising an outline of the whole system of revealed truth. There is no condition or circumstance of the Christian life which may not find here its exact counterpart and its suitable expression. There is no doctrine of Christianity, the germ of which may not be clearly traced here. The Old Testament Scriptures, and particularly this portion of them, when brought into comparison with the New Testament, are found to speak substantially the same language, and to have one scope and design. Since both emanate from one source, and since the one is but the full development of that which was partially revealed in the other, such coincidence was to be expected.

Considering the lapse of time since these sacred odes were written, and the obscurities unavoidably incident to translation; keeping in mind, also, that they were produced under the comparative darkness of the Mosaic dispensation, the manner in which they are found to harmonise with the Christian revelation may well excite our admiration, and affords an indubitable proof that they were indeed “written by inspiration of God.”

Christ is himself the key to the Book of Psalms. His person, his work, his sufferings, his triumphs, and the glories of his kingdom, form the subject-matter of the far larger portion of them. Without this key, that larger portion would be to us uninteresting, and for the most part inexplicable. David was a conspicuous type of Christ. The history and experience of his chequered life bear a close analogy to the humiliation, the sufferings, and the exaltation of our Divine Redeemer. He is the true David,—God's "beloved Son" (Matt. iii. 17 ; xvii. 5) ; "one chosen out of the people" (Ps. lxxxix. 19) ; the "rod coming forth out of the stem of Jesse, and the branch growing out of his roots" (Isa. xi. 1) ; "the Lord's Anointed" (Ps. ii. 2 ; cxxxii. 10) ; "the Messiah, the Saviour of the world" (John i. 41 ; iv. 42) ; "the King of glory" (Ps. xxiv. 7-10 ; 1 Cor. ii. 8). An inspired apostle tells us that David, in the 16th Psalm, "spake of the resurrection of Christ." (Acts ii. 31.) And, in many other Psalms, he is led by the spirit of prophecy to personate the Messiah, and to describe circumstances actually occurring in the life and death of Jesus Christ, which in his own case can have been true only in a subordinate or restricted sense. (See Ps. xxii. 14-18 ; lxix. 21.) "All things," said our blessed Lord, after his resurrection,—"all things must be fulfilled which were written in the Psalms concerning me." (Luke xxiv. 44.)

In the present attempt to produce a metrical paraphrase of the whole Book of Psalms, without the omission or transposition of any portion, I have not generally confined myself to the literal sense. Many of the Psalms indeed, such as Psalm i., manifestly admit of no other than a literal version ; but, assured that more generally there was a spiritual sense underlying that which was literal and apparent, I have sought to discover that deeper meaning. I have endeavoured to catch the spirit of the Psalmist, and to give expression to his divine sentiments in New Testament language. As Dr. Watts, in the preface to his version, has conclusively shown, this is the right way to use the Book of Psalms, and the only suitable method of adapting them to the exercises of Christian worship. His main object being to adapt the Psalms to this purpose, he found it convenient to divide them into parts; often transposing some verses and omitting others, in order to avoid the repetition of the same sentiments. The portions of Psalms thus omitted by him are not few nor inconsiderable, but extend sometimes to more than half the Psalm. Eleven Psalms he has altogether passed over, viz.: Ps. xxviii., lii., liv., lix., lxiv., lxx., lxxix., lxxxviii., cviii., cxxxvii., cxl.

Regarding all these sacred compositions, in common with the other Scriptures, as constituting so many portions of that excellent “word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever” (1 Peter i. 23), I have not been satisfied to pass by or exclude one of them. Nor have I deemed the obscurities attaching to some passages a sufficient reason for their omission. Not doubting that there was an important meaning couched under language sometimes very obscure, I have humbly, yet earnestly, sought to ascertain that meaning. For this purpose I have used such help as I could obtain from commentators, which, however, has been but scanty. To Bishop Horne I am more indebted on this score than to any other: but my chief aid has been derived from a higher source.

Knowing that “whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope" (Rom. xv. 4), when, in prosecuting my work, I came to an obscure or difficult passage, that blessed promise of our Lord and Saviour,—too seldom, alas! thought of, and too little trusted,—was remembered, "When He, the Spirit of truth is come, He will guide you into all truth." (John xvi. 13.) Having asked for that Divine guidance, I have then applied my mind afresh and more earnestly to the consideration of the phrase or passage in question. Generally, while so doing, some other passage of Scripture has been brought to my remembrance which seemed to correspond with it, or to throw some light upon it. To this I have immediately turned, and compared them together. Then another and another has, in like manner, been suggested and compared; and the combined light of these scattered texts has been thrown upon the obscure passage, until what was before dark has become clear, and even luminous.

Having gathered these texts, I thought it would be useful to retain them, and to place them in such a position as that they might serve to show the grounds of my interpretation of the particular passage to which they were applied. This led to the idea of illustrating the whole of my paraphrase by Scripture references. It was a work of time, and one requiring much patient care; but I deem the time and pains to have been well bestowed. In thus "comparing spiritual things with spiritual," the beauty and harmony of the various parts of Holy Scripture have been apprehended in a far higher degree than before. Indeed, I have often been astonished and delighted,—as every earnest student of the Bible must ever be,—to observe the fulness of meaning which is so marked a peculiarity in the “words which the Holy Ghost teacheth,” as well as the unity of design that characterises each several portion of Divine Revelation in its relation to every other portion. I am fully persuaded that any one who will carefully examine and compare these texts, with a humble and prayerful spirit, will find occasion to unite with the author in adopting the language of the Psalmist,—“I rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great spoil.” (Ps. cxix. 162.) This feature of my work will, I hope, entitle it to rank as a brief Scripture Commentary on the Book of Psalms.

I have styled this work a New Testament Paraphrase, rather than a literal version. Many of the Psalms, however, as already remarked, admit of no other than a literal interpretation, as Ps. i.; others, as Ps. xlv., can only be understood in a spiritual sense, or in their application to the Messiah; while others again, as Ps. viii., will properly bear both a literal and a spiritual construction. I have endeavoured to treat each Psalm according to its more prominent characteristic.

In the structure of my Paraphrase I have used a great variety of measure. I have tried to adapt the kind and measure of the versification to the character of the Psalm, whether solemn, or joyful, or plaintive. Every Psalm is written in one measure throughout. There are about sixty varieties of measure. Six of the Psalms are in blank verse, as they did not well admit of being otherwise rendered; these are Psalms lxxviii., cv., cvi., cxxxii., cxxxvi., and cxliv. Yet these, with two exceptions (Psalms cxxxii. and cxliv), are divided into regular stanzas; as are all the rest, except Psalms xli., lxix., and lxxxiii. Eighteen are given in two measures, and four in three measures, making twenty-six extra versions; which, added to the one hundred and fifty Psalms, make the whole number one hundred and seventy-six.

I have aimed to be concise, using amplification as sparingly as I could, consistently with my purpose to give to every passage a definite and intelligible sense. Psalm lxviii., 13 and 14, affords two distinct instances in which for this purpose amplification was necessary, and wherein I have used it more freely than anywhere else. The first of these verses I have applied to the resurrection and glorification of believers, when Christ shall "raise them up at the last day." Whatever may have been the literal sense of the words in the mind of the Psalmist when he penned them, or to whatever inferior event they may possibly refer, their application to that grand consummation of the Christian's hope, sustained as it is by three texts from the Old Testament and four from the New, will not, I trust, be deemed unwarrantable. I am not aware that this interpretation of the words has been suggested by any previous writer or commentator. On verse 14, it may be remarked, that while a mere allusion to Joshua's memorable victory over five confederate kings—which, I apprehend, is undoubtedly the fact referred to—would be well understood in the time of David yet in later times more is needed to render the sense of the passage clear. The closing couplet on this verse may be regarded as a comment, supported by two historical instances from Scripture, and by two that are prophetic.*

* Since the above was written, Dr. Adam Clarke's Commentary on the Psalms has fallen in my way. Turning to Psalm lxviii., to see what he made of verses 13 and 14, I found that he applied the passage to Barak's

Appended is a list of single phrases or short sentences from various parts of Scripture which are embodied in my Paraphrase. These I have gladly adopted, as I found occasion, and wherever I could with propriety introduce them, as tending to confirm and illustrate the sentiment which I have taken as one of the mottoes of my work,—“Scripture is its own best interpreter.”

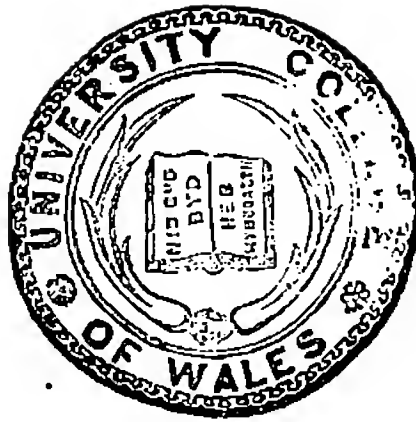

“Who hath despised the day of small things?” (Zech. iv. 10.) This work was commenced, in much feebleness, forty-seven years before its completion. The first attempt was on Psalm xxiii., in March, 1824. Very slowly I proceeded, attempting only such Psalms as I thought I clearly understood. Six years afterwards I had versified twenty-eight Psalms. Amongst these was Psalm xvi., a copy of which, in 1831, I presented to the late Dr. John Pye Smith, of Homerton. In a kind note he acknowledged its receipt, saying that he regarded my version “as comporting with the spirit and design of the Psalm;” and further, he was pleased to say that he “had used it, and intended still to use it, as an aid to victory over Jabin and Sisera (Judges iv.), and suggested no further application of it to the people of God in after times. His introductory remarks on the Psalm are as follows:—“I know not how to undertake a comment on this Psalm; it is the most difficult in the whole Psalter. . . . To attempt anything new on it would be dangerous, and, to say what has been so often said, would be unsatisfactory. . . . There are customs here referred to which I do not fully understand; there are words whose meaning I cannot, to my own satisfaction, ascertain, and allusions which are to me inexplicable. Yet of the composition itself I have the highest opinion. It is sublime beyond all comparison; it is constructed with an art truly admirable; it possesses all the dignity of the Sacred language. None but David could have composed it; and, at this lapse of time, it would require no small influence of the Spirit that was upon him to give its true interpretation.” But, since the aid of that Spirit is promised for this very purpose, why despair of understanding it?

private devotion ;” adding, with his characteristic humility, “in which, alas! I need every aid, every spark of holy brightness that I can obtain.” Such expressions from such a man could not fail to stimulate the writer to fresh efforts. Accordingly, in two years afterwards, the number of Psalms versified amounted to seventy-five. These, however, were all the easier and plainer portion. In the next twenty-eight years I produced only six or eight ; but, in 1860, courage was given me to proceed with the remainder. During the last eleven years, besides versifying the other, and far more difficult half of the Book, I have again and again revised the whole, and added the Scripture references. I am thankful that I am spared to complete the work. I cannot, indeed, say, with Bishop Horne, concerning his Commentary, speaking of the pleasure and profit which he had found in the exercise, that I “grieved when the last was done ;” for abundance of similar work is at hand, if but time and strength hold out. But, having done my best, I desire now to dedicate it to the Lord, with the fervent prayer that He will be pleased to accept it, and cause it to find acceptance in the sight of his people, and render it useful in promoting his glory and the interests of his kingdom.

O LORD, our Lord, how excellent thy name !	Deut. 32 : 3. Ps. 148 : 13.
Thy bounties o'er the earth extend ;	Ps. 33 : 5.
Thy power and glory the high heavens proclaim,	Ps. 19 : 1.
Thy wondrous works our thoughts transcend.	„ 33 : 5.
Thou from the mouth of babes of tenderest age,	Matt. 11 : 25.
Against thy foes dost strength ordain ;	1 Cor. 1 : 27.
So dost Thou silence oft their impious rage,
And make their wrathful purpose vain.	Matt. 21 : 16.
When I behold the firmament on high,
Built by thy hand, so fair, so bright ;	Gen. 1 : 6-8.
The moon and twinkling stars, that fill the sky,	„ 1 : 14-18.
Which Thou hast formed to rule the night :—	Job 9 : 7-9.
	„ 38 : 31-33.
	Ps. 136 : 9.
Lord, what is man, that Thou should'st condescend
To make his humble lot thy care ?	Job 7 : 17, 18.
Or what the son of man, that thou should'st bend	Ps. 144 : 3.
Thine ear to listen to his prayer ?	Isa. 57 : 15.
Next to the angels is his rank assigned ;	Heb. 2 : 6-8.
On earth is not his equal found :
For Thou to man hast given the reasoning mind,	Job 10 : 12.
And him hast with great honour crowned.	„ 32 : 8.
	„ 35 : 11.
Thou hast subjected all things to his feet,
That walk or creep, that soar or swim :	Gen. 1 : 23, 28.
The flocks and herds, and beasts of prey submit,	„ 9 : 1-3.
And learn to minister to him.	Job 5 : 22, 23.

A NEW TESTAMENT PARAPHRASE.

O LORD, "our Lord and Saviour,"	2 Pet. 1: 11.
How glorious is thy name ;
All other names excelling,	Acts 4: 12.
That praise or honour claim.	Phil. 2: 9-11.
Thy manifested glory
In all the earth is seen ;	Ps. 104: 24.
It shines above the heavens,	Isa. 12: 5.
Where mortals ne'er have been.	Ps. 148: 1-4.
	„ 148: 18.
Thou, from the mouth of sucklings,
Dost wondrous strength ordain ;*	1 Cor. 1: 27.
E'en infant lips may praise Thee,	Ps. 148: 12, 18.
And thine approval gain.
By these thy praise fulfilling,
Thou dost thy foes confound ;
Their angry clamour stilling,	Matt. 21: 15, 16.
With hymns of sweetest sound.	Luke 19: 37-40.
When I behold the heavens,
The work of thine own hand ;	Ps. 88: 6.
	„ 104: 2.
The moon and stars, whose courses
Thy sovereign wisdom planned :	Ps. 136: 5.
	Isa. 40: 26.

* Dr. Adam Clarke remarks on this text: "There is a very obvious sense in which the mouths of babes and sucklings show forth the praises of God; viz., the means by which they derive their first nourishment. In order to extract the milk from the breasts of their mothers, they are obliged to empty their mouth entirely of air, that the external air, pressing on the breast, may force the milk through its proper canals into the mouth of the child, where there is no resistance, the child having extracted all air from its own mouth. . . There is not one in ten thousand adults, who have had their first nourishment from the breasts of their mothers, who can perform the same operation again. Those who have had occasion to practice it have found great difficulty to learn that art, which, in the first moment of their birth, they performed to perfection. Here is the finger of God!"

O what is man, the earth-born,
 That Thou for him should'st care?
 And what man's sinful offspring,
 That they such grace may share?

- Then shook the earth, the hills from their foundation
 Were moved before the Lord, the rocks were rent ;
 They trembled at his righteous indignation,
 Which, like devouring fire, found rapid vent.
 " Our God is a consuming fire,"—before Him
 No flesh can stand ;—let earth and heaven adore Him.
- The heavens He bowed, and from his glorious dwelling
 Came down, beneath his feet thick darkness threw ;
 Borne on a cherub, his swift course impelling,
 Upon the wings of mighty winds He flew ;
 Darkness his secret place, and clouds his covering,
 Thick clouds and vapours all around Him hovering.
- A dazzling brightness struck with awe and wonder
 All who beheld ;—hailstones, and coals of fire,
 Accompanied the roar of crashing thunder ;
 What terror did the voice of God inspire !
 His mightiest foes were with his tempests battered,
 And with his lightnings all their hosts were scattered.
- The watery channels, and the earth's foundations,
 At thy rebuke, O Lord, were then laid bare ;
 But lo ! amidst these awful desolations,
 God for his servant's safety shows his care :
 From the great water-floods He sent and took me,
 And in my hour of peril ne'er forsook me.
- From my strong foe, 'gainst whom I had no power,
 From them that hated me, He set me free :
 The Lord in weakness was my stay, my tower ;
 In my calamity He succoured me :
 Of his great mercy, with good-will He sought me,
 And to a place of safety soon He brought me.

 Eph. 2 : 4-7.

The Lord hath known me to be upright-hearted, And that my hands from wilful stain were clean ; For I have kept his ways, and not departed From his good paths, wherever I have been : I knew his eye was ever watchful o'er me, And sought to keep his statutes still before me. Lord, to be upright I have daily striven, To keep myself from mine iniquity ; Therefore my soul is not to darkness driven, But Thou with favour recompensest me. Unto the merciful thy mercy floweth ; The upright soul the Lord's uprightness knoweth.	Ps. 25 : 21. " 26 : 1, 8, 11. Ps. 89 : 1. Ps. 97 : 10, 11. Prov. 11 : 31. Matt. 5 : 7. Prov. 10 : 20. Isa. 26 : 7.
Thou with the pure wilt show thyself still purer, But with the froward Thou wilt ever strive ; Thy humble saints of thy regard are surer, While haughty souls Thou wilt of joy deprive. Thou dost my path illumine, my prospects brighten ; The Lord my God my darkness doth enlighten.	Matt. 5 : 8. Lev. 26 : 21-28. Job 5 : 13. Prov. 11 : 20. Ps. 138 : 6. James 4 : 6. Job 29 : 8. Psalm xxxiii. No. 2.

O LORD, my Rock, on whom alone
 I build my expectation,
 My cries I send up to thy throne,
 O hear my supplication !
 Be Thou not silent, lest I die,
 While thus thy help imploring ;
 Hear, when I lift my hands on high,
 Thy holy name adoring.
 Lord, disappoint not
 My humble expectation ;
 But answer now my earnest cry,
 And grant me thy salvation.
 O draw me not away with those
 Who have from Thee departed ;
 Who peace profess, but mischief mean,
 The wicked and false-hearted.
 Because thy work they will not heed,
 Destruction must o’ertake them ;
 Since God, for every evil deed,
 Due recompense will make them.
 What hope remaineth,
 If once the Lord forsake them ?
 From bad to worse they will proceed,
 Till judgment overtake them.

Psalm xxx.

THEE I will extol, O Lord,	Ex. 15 : 2-15.
Thou hast lifted up my head ;	Isa. 25 : 1.
And, at thine almighty word,	Ps. 3 : 3.
All my foes and fears are fled :	„ 27 : 6.
O my God, I cried to Thee,	Ps. 18 : 48-50.
And thine hand has healèd me.	Ex. 15 : 26.
	Ps. 103 : 3.
	Hos. 11 : 3.
From the borders of the grave,	Job 33 : 18-30.
Thou hast brought my trembling soul.	Ps. 116 : 3-8.
Sing, ye saints, his power to save ;	„ 118 : 18.
He afflicts, and He makes whole :	Isa. 38 : 9-20.
Kept in life by Him, I live,	Job 5 : 18.
To his name new praise to give.	Job 10 : 12.
	Ps. 66 : 9.
	Acts 17 : 28.
While ye praise Him, ne'er forget	Ps. 22 : 3.
Holiness dwells with the Lord ;	„ 97 : 12.
Sin his anger kindles,—yet	Ps. 51 : 4, 8.
Life is with his smile restored.	„ 103 : 9.
Weeping may the night employ,	Isa. 12 : 1-3.
But the morning bringeth joy.	Ps. 126 : 5, 6.
	John 16 : 20-22.
	2 Cor. 7 : 10.
Once I said, when all looked fair,—
“ Surely I shall ne'er be moved : ”	Job 29 : 18.
Lord, it was thy favouring care	Job 10 : 12.
That so long my safeguard proved ;	Ps. 71 : 5, 6.
Thou didst hide thy face again,—	„ 116 : 6-9.
Then came darkness, trouble, pain.	Ps. 88 : 14, 15.
	„ 104 : 29.
Humbly, then, I cried to Thee,	Ps. 89 : 3, 4.
To my God my prayer arose,—	„ 89 : 46, 47.
“ Lord, what profit shall it be,	Job 17 : 16.
If the pit upon me close ?	„ 33 : 26-3.
Shall the dust thy truth proclaim ?	Ps. 6 : 5.
Shall it magnify thy name ?	„ 115 : 17.
	„ 118 : 17.

" Hear, O Lord, in pity hear,
 And have mercy on me, now ;
 Oh, be Thou, my Helper, near ;
 Who can help me, Lord, but Thou ?"
 Prayer was heard, and, in that day,
 Grief and mourning fled away.

Thee will I praise with heart and voice,	Ps. 33 : 21, 22.
And in thy mercy will rejoice ;	„ 86 : 12, 13.
For Thou hast all my trouble known,	Ps. 116 : 3-8.
And, 'midst distress, great favour shown.	„ 118 : 5-7. „ 138 : 3-8.

Thou from the foe hast set me free,	Job 36 : 16.
And bade me walk at liberty ;	Ps. 18 : 16-19. „ 124 : 1-7.
Have mercy on me, Lord, again,	Ps. 57 : 1-4.
For still of trouble I complain.	„ 123 : 3, 4. „ 143 : 3-12.

Mine eyes, consumed with grief and care,	Job 16 : 16.
The anguish of my soul declare ;	„ 17 : 7. Ps. 6 : 7.
Grief wears my life out, day by day ;	Ps. 69 : 3.
My years in sighing pass away.	„ 102 : 3. Job 7 : 3-7.

Because of sin, consumed by pain,	Job 33 : 19.
My bones no vital strength retain ;	Ps. 38 : 3.
My foes reproach, my neighbours shun,	Ps. 42 : 10.
And from me, as in fear, they run.	Job 30 : 10. Ps. 38 : 11.

Forgotten as the dead am I,	Ps. 143 : 3.
And like a broken vessel lie ;	Ps. 68 : 13.
Slanders prevail, and fears arise,	Jer. 20 : 10.
While men to take my life devise.	Ps. 38 : 12. Matt. 27 : 1.

But, Lord, in Thee I safely trust ;	Ps. 63 : 1.
Thou art my God,—the Good, the Just :	„ 118 : 28. Isa. 25 : 1.
My times are in thy hand ; to Thee,	Dan. 2 : 21.
For help against my foes I flee.	Acts 1 : 7. „ 17 : 26. Ps. 56 : 1-4.

From them that persecute me, save ;	Ps. 57 : 3.
A gracious smile from Thee I crave :	Ps. 4 : 6.
Upon thy servant pity take ;	Ps. 25 : 16-20.
“ Lord, save me,” for thy mercies' sake.	Dan. 9 : 18. Matt. 14 : 30.

Let not my soul be put to shame,
For I have called upon thy name :
Shame on the wicked shall attend,
Whose course the silent grave shall end.

Psalm cxxv.

EVER will I bless the Lord,
 And ever speak his praise ;
 Thou, my soul, his grace record,
 And glad thanksgivings raise.
 O ye humble ones, rejoice ;
 Magnify the Lord with me :
 Let us now, with heart and voice,
 To praise his name agree.
 When I sought the Lord by prayer,
 He heard my feeble cry ;
 All my fears and all my care
 Did at his bidding fly.
 Those who looked to Him for aid
 Always thus have been relieved ;
 None whose hopes on God were stayed
 Have ever been deceived.
 Oft the pious poor have cried
 For " help in time of need ;"
 Nor have such been e'er denied,
 But from their troubles freed.
 Holy angels, day and night,
 Watch o'er them that fear the Lord ;
 Hovering round them with delight,
 Deliverance to afford.
 O that all would taste and see
 The goodness of the Lord !
 Blessed must they ever be,
 Whose trust is in his word.
 Fear Him, O ye saints, and still
 In his love and grace confide ;
 And for all your wants He will Assuredly provide.

Psalm xxxv.

PLEAD Thou my cause, O Lord, and those restrain,
 Who strive with me, and seek to do me harm :
 Now for my help appear ; my strength sustain,
 And shield me with thine own almighty arm.

Psalm cxxvi.

THE wicked man by his transgression shows
 He has renounc'd his Maker's fear ;
 His heart by long self-flattery harden'd grows,
 Till he no warning voice will hear :
 Hateful his sin is found to be,
 While counting on impunity.

Psalm xxxvii.

FRET not, when the wicked rise
To a high estate ;
View them not with envious eyes,
When with pride elate :
For their glory soon shall pass ;
They shall wither as the grass.

Trust in God, seek to do good ;
Have no care beside :
Surely He will give thee food,
And for thee provide :
While to Him thy love aspires,
He shall grant thy heart's desires.

To the Lord thy way commit ;
Trust in Him alone ;
He will guide and prosper it ;
God thy work will own :
He will bring thy truth to light,
As the noon-day, clear and bright.

Rest in God, in every strait ;
Give not way to fear :
Patiently his will await,
And his counsel hear ;
Nor be troubled, though the deed
Of the wicked man succeed.

From all strife and anger cease ;
Fret not to do wrong :
Evil-doers know not peace,
Nor can prosper long.
Those who wait upon the Lord,
E'en on earth, have large reward.

Lord, make me know my end, I cried,
 Teach me to trace life's little span,
 And see, to check my sinful pride,
 How frail am I, how frail is man.

Psalm xl. No. 1.

PATIENTLY, in tribulation,

Long I waited for the Lord,
And He heard my supplication,
Timely aid did He afford.
From a horrid pit He brought me,
On a rock He set my feet,
And in a new song He taught me
His high praises to repeat.

In my well-established goings,
In the change thus wrought in me,
Many, Lord, shall see thy doings,
And shall fear and trust in Thee.

Blest is he whose whole affiance
Rests on God, whate'er betide ;
Nor with sinners seeks alliance,
Men of falsehood or of pride.

Lord, thy works, my thought transcending,
"Great and marvellous" I own ;

Manifold and never ending,—

Who can make their number known ?
Thoughts concerning man's salvation,
Plans formed from eternity,
Now approach their consummation,
In the Gospel mystery.

Needless now are sacrifices :

Christ, "the Lamb of God," appears :
His "one offering" suffices,
In the fulness of the years.
"Lo ! I come," He cries, "fulfilling
All the ancient prophets spake ;"
To redeem us, Christ was willing
Thus "a servant's form" to take.

Psalm xl. No. 2.

For God I waited patiently,
Till He should interpose,
In his good time, to rescue me
From overwhelming woes.

He heard my cry, and, by his hand,
Raised from the miry clay,
He made me on a rock to stand,
And cheered my onward way.

In a new song, my lips He taught
His praises to proclaim ;
Many shall see " what God hath wrought,"
And fear, and trust his name.

How blessed is the man who makes
The Lord his only trust ;
Heeds not the proud, and quite forsakes
The path of the unjust.

O Lord my God, thy love to man,
Thy thoughts, thy works, thy ways,
Shown in redemption's wondrous plan,
Are far above our praise.

The mighty sum can none compute :
The mysteries of thy grace,
All comprehending, yet minute,
No human mind can trace.

Not sacrifice does God desire,
As once his will ordained :
Sin offerings He does not require,
Their end is now attained.

GREAT is the Lord, and greatly to be praised,
 In Zion, the famed city of our God ;
 High, as his holy mount, is Zion raised ;
 Thence is his glorious grace diffused abroad.
 Conspicuous is Mount Zion from afar,
 Known as the city of the King of kings :
 Her palaces, how beautiful they are,
 Wherein are treasured earth's most precious things.
 Zion the joy of the whole earth shall be,
 Where a sure refuge all in God may find ;
 Her growing glories shall earth's rulers see,
 And, wondering, haste away, with troubled mind.
 Fear and amazement on their souls shall seize,
 Who thought, great God, thy city to subdue,
 When Thou their armaments shalt break with ease,
 And with thy scattering wind thy foes pursue.
 As in time past of Zion we have heard,
 So have we seen, her safety is secure :
 The Lord of hosts is faithful to his word ;
 God will establish it for ever sure.
 Lord, in thy temple we have thought of Thee,
 And in our hearts thy lovingkindness stored :
 According to thy name thy praise shall be,
 And the most distant lands shall know the Lord.

Eccles. 2 : 18, 19.
Their inward thought, their hope long fondly cherish'd, Is that their houses shall abide, Their dwelling-places last to following ages, And so perpetuate their pride : After their own loved names they call their lands, But soon all these possessions pass to other hands.	 Luke 12 : 19. Gen. 11 : 4. Dan. 4 : 30. Num. 32 : 41, 42. Judges 18 : 29. Luke 12 : 20.
Man, made for immortality, pursuing Earth's pleasures, honours, wealth, or power, Abideth not ; but, like the beasts that perish, Fritters away life's little hour : What folly thus to live without an aim ! Yet his posterity approve, and do the same.	Gen. 2 : 7. Titus 1 : 2. 1 John 2 : 16, 17. Job 14 : 2. Ps. 89 : 47. " 90 : 9. Dan. 5 : 18-25.
Thus pass away successive generations ; Like poor unthinking sheep they die ; And as a flock of sheep laid down to slumber, So in the graveyard do they lie ; Death feeds on them alike ;—the grandest tomb No beauteous form contains, but dust and hideous gloom.	Eccles. 1 : 4. Job 4 : 19-21. Ps. 39 : 4, 5, 11. Isa. 40 : 6-8. Isa. 14 : 11. Ezek. 22 : 27. Matt. 23 : 27.

But in the glorious resurrection-morning,
 How altered will man's state appear :
 The upright then shall rise, to have dominion
 O'er those who scorned or crushed them here :
 God will redeem his children from the grave ;
 He who receives the spirit will the body save.

 And trust not in oppression.
 If God increase your riches,
 For Him alone employ them ;
 On things above,
 Set your heart's love ;
 So will you best enjoy them.
 Once hath Jehovah spoken,—
 Earth with his claim resoundeth ;
 All power and might
 Are his by right,
 Nor time his empire boundeth.
 To God belongeth mercy,
 Great, manifold, and tender ;
 Yet thou, O Lord,
 A just reward
 To every man wilt render.

Psalm lxi. No. 1.

O God, Thou art my God indeed,
 Early will I thy favour seek :
 Of Thee my soul has urgent need,
 Oh, help me ; for " the flesh is weak."
 A dry and thirsty land, at best,
 Earth without Thee can yield no rest.
 Let me thy power and glory see,
 As in thy house I oft have seen ;
 When Thou, Lord, drewest near to me,
 Without a cloud to intervene.
 Better than life thy love I deem,
 And worthier of my chief esteem.

Psalm lxx.

PRAISE waiteth for Thee, O our God, in Zion;
 There shall thy people pay their solemn vow.
 O Thou that hearest prayer, whose word our souls rely on,
 To Thee, approaching, every knee shall bow.

Iniquities prevail, within, around us;
 No strength have we th' impetuous stream to stay:
 O Lord, our manifold transgressions would confound
 us,
 But grace divine can purge them all away.

How blessed is the man whom Thou, Lord, choosest,
 And causest in thy sacred courts t' abide;
 Where Thou to meet and bless thy people ever usest,
 And with thy favour they are satisfied.

By righteous deeds of terror, Thou preparest
 Answers to prayer for those who wait on Thee:
 For them that trust in Thee, in all the earth, Thou
 carest,
 And them that are afar off on the sea.

Psalm lxxvi.

SING aloud with cheerful voice,
 All ye lands of earth, rejoice;
 Sing to God, his praise proclaim;
 Sing the honour of his name:
 Gloriously, through earth and sky,
 Publish ye his praise on high.

Say to God,—how great art Thou!
 All thy foes to Thee shall bow;
 In thy works what wonders shine,
 Might and majesty divine:
 All the earth shall worship Thee,
 And to praise thy name agree.

Come, behold the works of God,
 Wide-spread all the earth abroad:
 Sinful children of mankind
 God too strong for them shall find;
 And his wrath, when they rebel,
 They shall prove most terrible.

By his wonder-working hand,
 Egypt's sea became dry land;
 And his people, safely led,
 Passed on foot through its dark bed:
 There with loud, exultant voice,
 In their God did they rejoice.

By his power He rules alone;
 "Earth his footstool, heaven his throne;"
 Thence his eyes the nations view;
 His good pleasure He will do:
 With his will let none find fault,
 Nor themselves in pride exalt.

Prov. 29 : 1.

The Lord hath said that He will bring those who were far off, nigh,
 And from the depths his people raise, and lift them
 up on high;
 Beneath their feet their deadliest foes will utterly subdue,
 As when on blood-stain'd fields of old, the Canaanites He slew.
 Thy goings they have seen, O God, within thy holy place;
 Thy wondrous steps, our God and King, with sacred
 awe they trace,
 As when, in long procession led, the Ark to Zion came,
 The singers went before, and sang Hosannas to thy name;
 The minstrels follow'd in their place, with instruments of song,
 And fair young damsels gladly join'd, the music to prolong.

Psalm lxi.

SAVE me, O God ; for, rushing on my soul,
Come the dark waters ; o'er my head they roll.
Lo ! in deep mire I sink, and find no ground ;
O'erwhelming water-floods beset me round.
Parch'd is my throat with unavailing cries ;
Waiting for Thee, my God, dim grow mine eyes.
They who with causeless hate my soul pursue
More than the hairs upon my head I view ;
And they who wrongfully my foes are found,
And would destroy me, are for power renown'd.
The sins of others on my head were laid,
And what I owed not that I freely paid.
Those sins and follies Thou, O God, hast known,
Which I have borne as if they were my own.

Let not the souls that humbly wait on Thee
Be overwhelm'd when they my sufferings see ;
Nor those, Lord God of hosts, who seek thy face,
Be scandalized because of my disgrace ;
Since all the sorrow and reproach I share,
Lord God of Israel, for thy sake I bear.

A stranger to my brethren now am I ;
At me my mother's children all look shy.
Zeal for thy house consumes me, and on me
Fall the reproaches vilely cast on Thee.
To my deep grief by weeping gave I vent ?—
And with long fasting was I well-nigh spent ?—
That was to my reproach. In sackcloth clad,
My judges spake against me. Worn and sad,
A proverb I was to the scoffing throng,
And my distress became the drunkard's song.

But, as for me, in an accepted hour,
 My prayer drew to my aid almighty power.
 Hear me, in thy great mercies, Lord, I cried,
 And ne'er the truth of thy salvation hide :
 Out of the mire my sinking feet release ;
 Save me from those whose hatred does not cease.
 Out of deep waters save my trembling soul,
 Ere o'er my head the stream impetuous roll.
 Soon, lest the deep engulf me, interpose,
 Nor let the pit her mouth upon me close.
 Hear me, O God, in loving-kindness hear ;
 Turn unto me, and let me find Thee near.
 According to thy plenitude of grace,
 And tender mercies, hide not Thou thy face.
 I am in trouble ; Lord, thy servant own ;
 O hear me speedily ; thy love make known.
 Unto my soul draw nigh, and set me free
 From cruel foes, who vex and harass me.

'Thou knowest what unjust reproach I bear ;
 My shame and my dishonour are thy care :
 Before Thee all mine adversaries stand,
 Mark'd by thine eye and subject to thy hand.

Heart-broken by reproach, and worn with woe,
 I look'd for some who might compassion show,
 But none found I to comfort or to cheer ;
 None to take pity on me saw I near.
 Gall for my meat they gave me, in that day,
 And offer'd vinegar, my thirst t' allay.

Armed were the Ephraimites, expecting conquest, Yet in the day of battle turned they back ; Because the covenant of their God they kept not, And in his holy law refused to walk.	Num. 14: 40-45. Judges 12: 1-6. 2 Chron. 13: 15-19. 2 Kings 17: 15-19. Hos. 11: 5-7.
His works and wonders soon had they forgotten, The marvellous deeds done in their fathers' sight, In Egypt's land, and in the field of Zoan, When from their bondage He delivered them.	 Ps. 106: 13. Ex. 7th to 12th. Dent. 11: 2-4.
The sea He clave, and caused them to pass through it ; The waters as a mound He made to stand : By day, He with a cloudy pillar led them, And all night long with a bright light of fire.	Ex. 14: 21. " 15: 8. Ps. 66: 6. 1 Cor. 10: 1. Ps. 105: 39. Neh. 9: 12.
For them the rocks He clave, in the wild desert, And gave them drink as from the depths profound ; Streams from the rock He brought, their course to follow, And flowing waters, which forsook them not.	Ex. 17: 6. Num. 20: 11. Ps. 105: 41. " 114: 8. 1 Cor. 10: 4.
Yet sinned they still more and more against Him ; The Most High they provoked, and tempted God : Meat for their lust they asked, and spake profanely, While in their heart to Egypt they turned back.	Dent. 9: 22. Ps. 95: 8, 9. 1 Cor. 10: 9. Heb. 3: 15, 16. Ex. 16: 2, 3. James 4: 3. Acts 7: 39.
Can God, said they, for us a table furnish, Here in the desert, barren, dry, and bare ? The rock He smote, and thence gushed forth the waters ; Can He with bread and flesh his people feed ?	Num. 11: 4-6. Ps. 106: 14. Ps. 105: 41. Num. 11: 13.

Jehovah heard it, and his wrath was kindled ; Then against Jacob burnt consuming fire, And against Israel went forth his fierce anger, Because they in their God believèd not.	Num. 11 : 1-3. Num. 11 : 18-23. 33, 34. Ps. 106 : 23. Heb. 3 : 18. Jude 5.
They trusted not in Him and his salvation, Though from the clouds He had their food supplied, Had opened for their sake the doors of heaven, And rained down manna daily from the skies.	Ex. 16 : 2-4. 2 Kings 7 : 2, 19. Mal. 3 : 10. Ex. 16 : 4, 14, 15.
Man did eat angels' food ; the corn of heaven God freely gave them, yet they wanted flesh ; Then in the heavens caused He to blow an east-wind, And by his power the south-wind also blew.	Ps. 105 : 40. John 6 : 31-33. 1 Cor. 10 : 3. Num. 11 : 31.
Like clouds of dust, scattered He flesh upon them, And feathered fowls, numberless as the sand ; Amidst their camp He let them fall promiscuous, Around their habitations were they heaped.	Ex. 16 : 23. Num. 11 : 31, 32.
So ate they and were filled ; for God had given them Their own desire, their longings gratified : But while the meat they craved they yet were eating, Upon them suddenly came the wrath of God.	Num. 11 : 18-23. Num. 11 : 33. Ps. 106 : 15.
Plague-smitten, fell the stoutest men among them, The choicest men of Israel were struck down ; Yet still they sinned, and still were unbelieving, For all his wondrous works their eyes had seen.	Num. 11 : 33. 1 Cor. 10 : 5. Num. 14 : 11, 22. Hos. 10 : 9.
Therefore did He consume, in just displeasure, Their days in vanity, their years in woe : When He chastised and slew them, then they sought Him, And earnestly again his will inquired.	Num. 14 : 19, 35. " 17 : 12, 13. Ps. 90 : 9. 1 Cor. 10 : 5. Hos. 5 : 15.

Then they remembered God was their Redeemer, And the High God their everlasting Rock : But with their mouth they praised Him, insincerely, And words untrue too oft their tongues expressed.	Dent. 32 : 4, 15. Isa. 44 : 6. " 45 : 4. Ps. 106 : 12, 13. Ezek. 33 : 31. Hos. 10 : 4.
Still was their heart not right with God, nor were they True to his covenant, stedfast in his faith ; But He, in great compassion, oft forgave them ; Pitying their frailty, He destroyed them not.	Neh. 9 : 16. Isa. 1 : 4, 5. Num. 14 : 18-30. Neh. 9 : 17-19. Hos. 13 : 9.
Yea, many a time turned He his anger from them, And stirred not up the fierceness of his wrath ; For He remembered they were feeble mortals, Gone with a breath, not to return again.	Neh. 9 : 13-31. Isa. 43 : 9. Hos. 11 : 8, 9. Job 4 : 19-21. " 7 : 7. " 14 : 1-5. Ps. 135 : 14-16. James 4 : 13.
How oft did they provoke Him in the desert, And in the wilderness his Spirit grieve : They tempted God and Christ with their backslidings, And dared to limit Israel's Holy One.	Ps. 95 : 9, 10. Isa. 63 : 10. Eph. 4 : 30. Heb. 3 : 16, 17. Num. 14 : 22. 1 Cor. 10 : 9. Isa. 50 : 2.
How soon was his delivering hand forgotten, The day that He had saved them from the foe ; The miracles which He had wrought in Egypt, His wonders in the field of Zoan wrought :—	Ps. 106 : 13. Ps. 106 : 8-11. Ps. 105 : 27-37.
How He to blood had turned their streams and rivers, So that they could not drink, their thirst t' assuage ; And flies and noxious insects sent amongst them, And swarms of frogs, destructive, noisome, foul.	Ex. 7 : 14-21. Ps. 105 : 29. Ex. 8 : 1-24. Ps. 105 : 30, 31.
Their increase, also, to the caterpillars, Their labour to the locusts did He give ; With great hail-storms destroyed their vines and fruit-trees, Their flocks and cattle with hot thunder-bolts.	Ex. 10 : 13-15. Ps. 105 : 34, 35. Ex. 9 : 23-25. Ps. 105 : 32, 33.

- On them cast He the fierceness of his anger ;
 His indignation sore affliction brought ;
 His hand let loose amongst them evil angels,
 Producing darkness, such as might be felt.
- Ex. 9 : 14-16.
 Ex. 10 : 21-23.
- Thus found his anger vent, nor did He spare them,
 But gave their life up to the pestilence ;
 Smote in one night all the first-born in Egypt,
 Of their chief strength the tents of Ham deprived.

God in th’ assembly of the mighty stands,
 Amidst his earthly representatives;
 Marks how the power entrusted to their hands
 They use, and an impartial sentence gives.

How long, ye judges, standing in his stead,
 Will ye the vile accept, the just condemn?
 Defend the poor and fatherless, and spread
 The shield of your protection over them.

Do justice to th’ afflicted, raise the poor,
 And save the helpless from the robber’s den;
 Unto the needy their lost rights restore,
 And rid them from the hand of wicked men.

Psalm lxxvii.

“ Zion the Lord hath founded ”
 Upon the holy hills;
 By walls of strength surrounded,
 Her courts his presence fills.
 He loves the gates of Zion,
 And there reveals his grace,
 More than in all the dwellings
 Of Jacob's chosen race.

Great things of thee are spoken,
 Thou city of our God:
 Of thee it is predicted,
 Thy fame shall spread abroad.
 Egypt and Babylonia,
 Philistia and Tyre,
 Those ancient foes of Israel,
 Shall after thee inquire.

These, saith thy God, shall know me,
 With Ethiopia's race;
 These shall become my people,
 And share with thee my grace.
 As citizens of Zion,
 I will of each declare,—
 This man, born of the Spirit,
 Became a Christian there.

It shall be said of Zion,
 As her transcendent fame,
 That forth from her the Saviour,
 “ The man Christ Jesus ” came.
 Such honour upon Zion
 “ The Highest ” doth confer;
 With everlasting mercies,
 God shall establish her.

Sparkling with beauty, like the early dew.

Titus 2: 11, 12.
Rom. 12: 1.
2 Cor. 8: 5.
Hos. 14: 5, 6.
2 Tim. 1: 1-7.

His truth the Lord hath pledg'd, and He will never
 His purpose alter, or his covenant break;
 Thou art, O Christ, He saith, a Priest for ever,
 After the order of Melchisedec.

Ps. 89: 34.
 „ 132: 11, 12.
 Zech. 6: 13.
 Heb. 6: 20.
 „ 7: 1-29.

Lord Jesus, reign;—subdue all sin and error;
 Prince of the kings of all the earth art Thou:
 The Lord at thy right-hand shall strike with terror
 All who to thy just rule refuse to bow.

1 John 3: 8.
 Rev. 11: 15-17.
 Rev. 1: 5.
 Rev. 6: 15-17.
 „ 11: 13.

“The day of wrath” shall Christ's sure triumph
 hasten,
 While multitudes before Him fall down slain;
 The chiefs of many countries He shall chasten,
 And over all the heathen He shall reign.

His work of salvation his honour secures;
 His glorious righteousness ever endures;
 His wonderful mercy be fixed in our mind;
 He is full of compassion, most gracious and kind.

Rom. 3: 24-26.
 Dan. 9: 24.
 John 3: 16.
 2 Cor. 9: 15.
 Ps. 86: 15.

To all them that fear'd Him, He ever gave food;
 His promise to such He will always make good.
 He showed to his people the might of his hand,
 When He gave them their portion in Canaan's good land.

Ps. 84: 9, 10.
 Matt. 6: 28, 31-33.
 Josh. 24: 2-13.
 Neh. 9: 7-25.

The works of his hands are in faithfulness wrought;
 Not a word He hath spoken shall e'er come to nought:
 His precepts, unchanging, for ever abide;
 From truth and uprightness they turn not aside.

Josh. 23: 14.
 Num. 23: 19.
 Matt. 5: 18.
 Rom. 7: 12.

Redemption, of old, to his people He sent:
 His covenant is settled; He will not repent:
 His grace thro' all ages continues the same;
 How holy and reverend Jehovah's great name!

O GIVE thanks unto the Lord, for He is good;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.
 To the God of gods, and Lord of lords, give thanks;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.
 Unto Him who only doeth wondrous things;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.
 Who by his great wisdom made the heavens;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.
 Who above the waters made the earth appear;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.
 Unto Him who great light-bearers form'd on high;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.
 Fix'd the sun's bright orb, to give us light by day;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.
 And the moon and stars, to cheer and rule the night;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.
 Unto Him give thanks, who Egypt's first-born smote;
 For his mercy endureth for ever.

Ps. 104: 27, 28.
Job 39: 39-41.

As worthless counts He much that men desire,
Nor pleasure takes in things which they admire ;—
The strength or fleetness of the noble horse,
Athletic feats, or the bold racer's course.

Job 12: 16-21.
Ps. 33: 13-16.
Eccles. 2: 1-11.
" 6: 1-12.
Ps. 33: 17.
Hos. 1: 7.

In them that fear Him doth the Lord delight ;
His humblest saints are precious in his sight :
He looks with pleasure only upon those
Who in his mercy cheerful hope repose.

Ps. 25: 12-14.
" 103: 11, 13, 17.
" 116: 15.
Ps. 149: 4.
Jer. 17: 7.
Mal. 3: 16, 17.

Praise, O Jerusalem, Jehovah's name ;
Thy God, O Zion, praise, with loud acclaim ;
For He with strength hath girded thee around,
And with his blessing hath thy children crown'd.

Isa. 59: 9.
" 12: 4-6.
Zech. 4: 7.
" 9: 9.
Isa. 60: 9-14.
" 54: 13.
" 60: 19-22.

Peace hath He given, and plenty ; thou dost eat,
By his good-will, the finest of the wheat ;
Whilst He, to make provision for thy need,
His high command sends forth with lightning speed.

Isa. 60: 15-16.
Ps. 81: 16.
" 132: 15.
Job 37: 2, 8, 12.
Ps. 107: 30.
Isa. 40: 3-5.

Revolving seasons pass, with rapid flight;
He clothes the landscape with a robe of white:
His snow, like wool, falls softly on the ground;
Like ashes, his hoar-frost He sprinkles round.

Gen. 8: 22.
Ps. 74: 17.
Job 37: 6.
„ 38: 22, 29.
Job 37: 10.

His hail He casts forth, with resistless hand;
Before his piercing cold, who, who can stand?
But lo! a milder wind He makes to blow,
And soon the ice dissolves, the waters flow.
